

Maisel's Bad Throw Costs Yankees Game

Senators Turn Defeat Into Victory in the Ninth, After Two Men Have Been Put Out.

When Nick Altrock, pitcher in chief to the Washington Senators, turned to the fans in the grandstand at the Polo Grounds in the ninth inning yesterday afternoon and said: "Keep your seats; Washington will now start a rally and win the game!" he naturally enough got the "ha ha!"

Since the score then stood 3 to 6 in favor of the Yankees, there was apparently little chance of the prophecy being fulfilled. And when, after Acosta, batting for Ayres, had walked, the next two men down on easy outfield flies, all chances of Washington winning seemingly had vanished. But baseball is uncertain. Washington did rally and win the game by a score of 5 to 5.

Scher, Acosta, the schoolboy marvel from Cuba, now spending his summers in Washington and other American League cities, batted for Yancy Ayres, to start the ninth frame. Leonard Cole, who made the song "This is the Life" popular in the box, and with his well known disposition toward generosity, passed the young Cuban. But Moeiler and Eddie Foster then fled out and all seemed well. Milan, however, singled in left field, putting Acosta on second, when Acosta singled to right scoring Acosta and Milan went to third, to count on a triple by Howard Shanks. That drive by Shanks ended the reign of Cole and Ray Keating came into the batter.

He found Gaudin on third, with Shanks on second and Cy Morgan at the bat. Keating pushed one over the plate, which Morgan turned down the third base line to Moeiler. The runners got under way, and, to the horror of the crowd, Moeiler made a bad throw to Williams, allowing Gaudin to score with what proved to be the winning run. Shanks also crossed the plate, but was declared out for interference a moment later.

Clark Griffith, who was on the coaching lines, tried to stop Shanks as he rounded third. The runner, with full speed ahead, plunged into the manager and sent him crashing to the ground. Griffith was completely knocked out and was revived with some difficulty. The Yankees who had seen the collision surrounded Hildebrandt, the umpire, maintaining that Shanks was out for interference. The official had apparently not seen the play, and he appealed to Sisk O'Rourke, who declared Shanks out. Immediately Sisk was surrounded by hostile Senators, who argued for a while, but to no avail.

John Henry, the Washington catcher, had a narrow escape from serious injury. In the third inning he was struck in the groin by a foul tip off Cook's bat and fell to the ground. The game was called for about ten minutes while he was brought back to consciousness. Henry refused to leave the game and caught the inning out. So painful was his hurt, however, that he was finally forced to quit. Al Williams taking his place.

Loose fielding was the cause of the defeat of the Yankees. Luther Cook may be young and enthusiastic, but it would seem, he has much to learn in the art of fielding. It was his glaring misjudgment of a long fly by Shanks in the second inning which netted the batter two bases and gave the Senators a start. In the same inning, a few minutes later, Jimmy Walsh did the same thing on a drive by Danny Moeiler, with two on bases, and permitted the runner to get to third. Then he made a wild throw, on which Danny scored. As told before, Maisel's wild heave made possible the winning run.

It was one of those see-saw games which explains fully just why baseball holds its grip on the American public. The Yankees got after Joe Boehling in the fourth inning for three runs on four hits. Nothing daunted, the Senators came back with a quartet of tallies in the second and third innings, made possible in no small degree by the misdeeds of the Yankee defense. The visitors increased their margin in the third frame, utilizing the squeeze play to score Slide Milan from third, but the Yankees tied it up in the same inning by pushing over two runs on two hits, two stolen bases and a hit batsman.

A home run by Shanks into the left field stands in the fifth put the Yankees in the run again until the eighth, when a sharp right coupled with an error by Moeiler, gave them three runs and what looked like a winning lead.

Half a dozen pitchers were shown in the afternoon and none was in especially good form. King Cole—well—the less said the better. Roy Fisher was all right in spots, and not enough was seen of Keating to render a decision. Boehling and one of those days that southpaws frequently have, Ayres was in good form.

Joe Benz Has Eye on Future

Chicago, June 2.—Joe Benz, pitcher of the Chicago White Sox, looked over the children in the Municipal Court to-day seeking to adopt a baby. "I want a good sturdy boy with the right kind of arm," he said.

The clerk of the court promised to look over for a boy to suit Benz's requirements.

Benz was married here this spring immediately after returning from the round-the-world tour.

STIRRING BATTLES FOR FLATBUSH FANS

Superbas Lose 13-Inning Game to the Braves and Then Get Revenge.

After twenty-two innings of baseball at Ebbets Field yesterday afternoon the Boston Braves and Brooklyn Superbas rested on their arms, ready to leap at each other's throats again this afternoon. The Braves won the first game, a thirteen-inning affair, by a score of 3 to 2, while the closing engagement went to the home talent with the totals standing at 4 to 2. To-day and to-morrow will be "Orphans' Days" at Ebbets Field, and the genial Charles H. Ebbets will play host to some three thousand children.

The first game yesterday was a hair-raising battle and every run scored had its inception in extra base hits. Bill James was perhaps the most despised man in Flatbush last night. Not alone did he twirl a remarkable game, but it was his fluke single to George Cutshaw that enabled Mann to score the winning run. Be it here related that Mann gave superabundant a kick in the ribs by oversteering a hoodoo frame with a curve to left field.

The Braves got off to a flying start in the first inning, getting two counts over on triples by Evers and Connolly and an infield out by Gilbert. In the fifth inning Zach Wheat put his team up in the fight by lifting the ball over the right field wall with "Red" Smith on second base. Smith, incidentally, got on with a crashing double to left field.

Mannville had another remarkable day in the field. There was never the slightest sign of a slip up in his work. Whaling did good work behind the bat. "Silent" John Hummel is losing no opportunity to make good on his assignment at first base, and in the opening game, besides being all over the field, cracked out a couple of hits. Cutshaw, too, played sparkling ball in the field.

The Superbas won the second game by bunting their hits off Coehran. Bob Pfeiffer pitched good ball throughout and managed to check the various demonstrations which the Braves made from time to time. Stallings hurried his reserves into the fight toward the end, but he failed to accomplish his purpose.
